Alaska enjoys the services of 26 public radio licensees spread across our state, serving well over 90% of our population. Serving the residents living in Alaska's far flung reaches is a job uniquely suited to radio and many of our listeners' only service comes from their community's public radio station. Program content varies widely, from various forms of locally produced entertainment to current news and information from national and regional sources, reflecting the needs of each community, urban or rural. Alaska's Public Radio has something for everyone.
